Editorial Articles.

FROM THE DAILY P. C. A.

OUR CHRISTIAN BROTHER.

It is refreshing to turn from the ear-splitting clamor of political strife to the pretty, edifying columns of the Saturday Press. This truly Christian journal, gathering its inspiration from the pure, clear founts of Christianity, and breathing of the higher life, and the joys to come, is a newspaper after our own heart. Our chief delight is in its virtue. It discusses temperance with a moderation rare, indeed, in these radical times. It wants local option, and it wants to see the saloon keepers go clear out of business. The Press sniffs at every man engaged in selling liquors as a near relation of Satan, who, by the way, is the mainstay of every Christian community. By this we mean that if there were no Satans there would not be the least necessity for piety, and the editor of the Press might dance the wicked hula every night of his life, sure of going to heaven in a hand-barrow. With the mild forbearance which would see all the gin-selling sons of Belial burned at the stake, the Press drives contentedly ahead, and concludes with a wet-nosed invitation to all the temperance people in the nation to stand in with it and crush out the liquor trade of these islands. We can imagine that at this stage of the editorial the writer locked the door, gave the proprietor a thirstily suggestive squint, and pulled his bottle from its secret drawer for a good Christian bar-the-door snifter.

Refreshed by the eye-opener the Press, with cow-like satire, goes for the ADVERTISER--which, indeed, appears to be the principal business of these Honolulu journals--as follows:

"There is no other word which so trippingly falls from the Imposition Hessian's tongue as sore-head. There is no counter check quarrelsome to such polite stigma, save to be equally polite and call the gentlemanly Hessian a very gentlemanly liar. Sore-headism is a disease that is so universally prevalent that the Independents of Hawaii-wei would be indeed lucky if they escaped--as a party. We have done a little to show up a few members of the Independent party in their true colors. We do not deny that there are sore-heads in the Independent ranks, etc., etc."

This is fierceness. An Imposition Hessian is a cruel word, and in admirable harmony with the sewing circle order of satire, in which the rest of these paragraphs, some half a dozen in number, and all aimed at the ADVERTISER, are couched. Twenty-one hundred miles is a long way to travel for the luxury of being called an Imposition Hessian, but the ocean was smooth, and the steamer's accommodations were incomparable. A Hessian is one who differs from the Press, and an Imposition Hessian an "anonymunkles and pseudonymunkles who, fighting behind their flimsy ambuscade, think to divert the Press from its path of duty by the ku-klux tactics they have adopted." These names are even worse than the foregoing, but as the Press is a Christian, and a brilliant reflex of the Christian spirit of its friends, we are astounded that it has had nothing more to say. We find that it is the custom of the Honolulu follower of the Lord to turn his cheek to the smiter, never to raise his voice in anger, to be sweltering with charity for all men, and here we have a brilliant illustration of the beauty of that creed. It would not be right to say, that for a Christian newspaper, the Press has a bad smell, a sulphurous smell, a strong brimstone odor, and a don't-give-a-damn swagger which belongs more to a sinful filibuster than a sheet which would have us believe its utterances are partially inspired by the Holy Ghost.

THE HAWAIIAN ENDOWMENT ASSOCIATION.

The Hawaiian Endowment Association Bill reminds us of a celebrated bull-fight that once took place in Spain. Over sixty magnificent toros gasped out their life-blood on the sands of the arena, eight matadors were mortally wounded, and three picadors were killed outright. After the bull-fight a riot among the populace led to calling out the troops, and forty-three people were shot down. But this grand affair was started with the worthy object of founding a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Madrid. This bill is for the relief of the lepers, and a conscientious Christian might state, with some reason, that there is somewhat of moral leprosy attached to the skirts of lotteries. Yet there are cases where this method of raising funds has been in a great measure excusable. In San Francisco, when the Mercantile Library Association was hopelessly in debt, a lottery pulled it through. The big prize was won by a wealthy New York banker, and some of the minor prizes fell to people who were in actual need of them. The lottery is the mildest form of gambling. The result is so slow in coming about that there is no wild doubling up, no neck or nothing betting. It is, in fact, an old woman's game, and by the way experienced lottery players say that old women and deaf men have the odds in their favor all the time. Why this should be one of these unknown mysteries of the doctrine of chances which mere earthly vision is unable to penetrate. So far as the Hawaiian Endowment scheme is concerned, we shall have more to say about it hereafter. Though all men and women are natural gamblers, and the Hawaiian loves to take shares in the blind goddess, the expediency of opening a game under our noses requires a strong defence to entitle it to any consideration.

ONE OF THEM.

The editorial writers of the Bulletin, some half a dozen, we believe, have shrouded themselves in mystery. From behind the rocks and bushes of this incognita they have showered mud bullets on all their enemies. Each gentleman has trotted out his own particular grievance, and taken the scalps of his own particular set of political foes. This happy family of literateurs, all drawing upon the same dirt heap, are loaning vituperative adjectives in pure fraternal love are growing careless of late in that very necessary part of anonymous journalism--covering up the tracks. For example--in Tuesday's Bulletin we find in an editorial entitled "An Amendment to the Subsidy Bill," the following: "to avoid the possibility of a question the amendment should be worded thus: 'Provided, however, that said subsidy shall be paid as aforesaid upon the condition that no increase shall be made, etc.'"

the possibility of a question the amendment should be worded thus: 'Provided, however, that said subsidy shall be paid as aforesaid upon the condition that no increase shall be made, etc.'"

As this is not the age of miracles, and the sun did not stand still to allow Mr. W. O. Smith's remarks, delivered at 4:30 p.m., to be reported in the Bulletin, published at 3 p.m., we can only conclude that this statesman adds to the arduous task of making laws for the country, the pleasing literary occupation of writing editorials for the Bulletin. Mr. Smith is to be congratulated on the very spirited tone of his editorial work, and the delicious incisiveness which he infuses into his evening thunderbolts. Mr. Smith, through the Bulletin, says what ought to be done, and then, like a worthy patriot, peels off his metaphorical coat, and goes and does it. And when Mr. Smith, through the Bulletin, congratulates Mr. Smith, on the floor of the House, for his wisdom, we recognize the great value of an organ in smoothing the path to Parnassus.

Now, Mr. Smith is too modest to allow us to infer that all the herculean political labors of the Bulletin have been accomplished by him, and therefore he should give us the names of his associates. From the sweetly charitable tone which has ever pervaded the Bulletin, we judge that they are all good Christians. Nor should we be in the least astonished if some of Mr. Smith's co-editors had attained the dignity of deaconship in the church. None but the truly good and pious, the elect who drink at the eternal founts of charity and truth, and the whites of whose eyes are ever turned towards the Throne of Grace, could write in the calm moderate tone in which the Bulletin's editorials have ever been couched. None could so carefully avoid falsehood, be so sparing of the feelings of others, be so mild, unprejudiced, and brimful of brotherly love. Surely Mr. Smith will not be so selfish as to take all this credit to himself, but will proclaim to an admiring community his co-laborers in the Bulletin's political vineyard.

THE BANK BILL.

The Chamber of Commerce has appointed a committee, consisting of Messrs. Davies, Isenberg, Bishop and Spreckels to draft a bank bill which shall be satisfactory to the members of this community. This is the wisest method that could be devised to meet every objection and unite those discordant elements which have been warring about this National Bank question since the opening of the Legislature. We are confident that Colonel Spreckels is willing to meet any sound proposition tending towards the restoration of the prosperity of these Islands more than half way, and that he is quite as anxious to see this currency question satisfactorily settled as any merchant in Honolulu. He is more deeply interested in this section of the world than any man in the Islands, he has millions of capital invested here, and he has no desire to place himself in a position antagonistic to any merchant or planter in this Kingdom. No attempt was made to press the original Bank Charter bill when popular sentiment opposed it, and no desire has been evinced to force the present bill on the people, should it be open to similar objection. What we want now is harmony among the merchants, and united and intelligent effort will pull us safely through the rough water which threatens us. We are sure the committee will acquit itself with credit, and we shall have a document where there will be nothing to kick at.
